"Sport McAllister was written with the view of fitting the peculiar talents of Bobby Gaylor, and it is needless to say that it fits him like a glove. Among the people engaged to support Gaylor are Georgia Parker, who has been styled the "American Carmenita"; May Gaylor; the Olympia Quartette, who were with Evans & Hoyer's "Parlor Match" company; Jennie St. Claire, the famous soprano; C. W. Young, an eccentric comedian, formerly a member of Murray & Murphy's company, and a large number of specialty performers of equal fame. A bevy of pretty girls will be seen in many new and novel specialties, which will be enhanced by elegant and costly costumes. Manager Brady has spared neither time nor expense in getting up "Sport McAllister," and promises us a genuine treat in the way of fun and music at Evans opera house on Monday evening.

IN IRELAND'S CAUSE

Eloquent Appeal for Erin's Rights by Hon. John F. Finerty.

HER HARP ON THE WILLOWS

And All Her Songs Are Threnodies—That Touching Tale Told Over Again in the Burning Words of a Patriot.

Anaconda gave Ex-Congressman John F. Finerty a magnificent reception last night. The Wolfe Tone guards, accompanied by its newly organized fire and drum corps and a delegation of 50 of the most prominent business men of this region, escorted the distinguished gentleman from the Montana hotel to the opera house. On the stage were Senator Thornton, Marcus Daly, Alderman Shovlin, R. D. Walsh of Butte, Judge Fitzgerald, T. R. E. Berry, Mr. Murphy, Shelley Tuttle, Colonel O'Leary, Joe Peters, John R. Toole and other representative citizens. The Wolfe Tone guards saluted the orator of the evening as he entered upon the stage, which courtesy was gracefully acknowledged by the man who, more than once, in the by-gone days wore the uniform of the Irish soldier and carried a pike in his beloved country's cause.

Senator Thornton introduced the speaker of the evening, saying that Americans as well as Irishmen had just cause to be proud of such noblemen as John F. Finerty. Orator, patriot, soldier, scout, statesman and journalist he has been weighed in almost every walk of life and never once has he been found wanting. "He comes among us," said Senator Thornton, "crowned with the laurels of many a notable victory won in the cause both of his native and adopted country. We are glad to welcome such a man to our city; he honors us in his coming. Fellow citizens of Anaconda, I am grateful for the honor afforded me in being called upon to introduce this evening to this magnificent and representative audience, this eloquent and big-hearted Irishman, Hon. John F. Finerty."

Senator Thornton's neat little introductory speech was greeted with hearty applause. Mr. Finerty as he stepped forward was given an ovation. In the history of this city no more eloquent address was ever delivered here than that delivered by Mr. Finerty. A man of commanding appearance and deep, powerful voice, full of the noble fire and vigor of his honored race, and possessing unusual personal magnetism, at times pathetic, at others witty, always persuasive and deeply in earnest, he bends his audience to his will and holds them enthralled from first to last.

After paying an eloquent tribute to the energy, industry and hospitality of the people whom he has met in Anaconda and other Montana cities, he turned to his subject, "The Heroic Irish History." In a charming manner he traced the causes which led up to Ireland's thralldom and eloquently recounted the cruelties practiced by Erin's conquerors from the days immediately succeeding St. Patrick to the present. For centuries Ireland had been enslaved not only politically, but intellectually. Over her green plains have hung dark clouds of oppression enforced by English laws. Not only in a material but in a literary sense has the free thought of Ireland been fettered and bound by chains forged by a government cold and cruel in every inspiration. Unable to justify her course in Ireland, England has sought to paint the Irish people as illiterate savages, incapable in all regards of self control or self government. In every corner of the world the children of Erin have given the lie to these assertions. In Australia and in California, in France and in far off India in Montana and in every state of the union and in every country on the face of the civilized globe the Irish people have prospered and demonstrated their fitness for official trust and their worth as citizens.

Mr. Finerty told over again, in words of passionate eloquence, the familiar story of Ireland's wrongs at the hands of King Richard II., the Henrys, Elizabeth, Mary, William and the rest of the Saxon rulers, whose reigns are only distinguished by a black list of cruelties and outrages practiced upon unhappy Erin. He told how Edward Bruce and his 30,000 picked Scotch soldiers fought and met death upon Irish soil fighting side by side with the Irish for Ireland's freedom. "The Irish," he exclaimed, "were on the glorious field of Bannockburn, and when the cry arose of 'Scotland for ever' the green flag of old Erin was found at the head of the column and many an Irish pike pierced an English coat of mail that day."

He told of the terrible famine which succeeded the splendid victories achieved by Bruce, and of the cruel and unequal battle in which the noble Scotchman fell among thousands of England's slain. The apathy which now held the nation for a century; the splendid achievements of the McMurroughs, the O'Connells, the O'Neills, the O'Toole, the Geraldines, the Fitzgeralds and O'Connors; the rupture between King Henry VIII. and the Pope, and of Henry's efforts to make himself head of the church as the ruler of England; how in the end by force of numbers Ireland was again devastated and laid waste; how Elizabeth sought to stamp out the national life of Ireland by sweeping the island with fire and sword; how Bloody Mary and cold, cruel, calculating Cromwell and murderous Mountjoy sought to crush the splendid national spirit of Erin, and in their brutal work left nothing for England to rule over but carcasses and ashes. All this was told in language that was often interrupted by bursts of enthusiastic applause by his enraptured audience. "In all these years," said the orator, "thank God, Ireland has never failed to keep up the inspiring but unequal fight for her faith and her freedom. She has never bowed her crest to the Saxon oppressor."

Mr. Finerty continued the story of the trials, triumphs and tragedies which Ireland experienced in the time of the Tudors and the Stuarts, and in burning words recalled the days when education in Ireland was made a penal offense; when the same price was placed upon the head of the wolf, the priest and the schoolmaster.

"To-morrow, when you go to your comfortable churches and beautiful cathedrals," said he, "and as you sit in cushioned pews think of your ancestors, who a little over 100 years ago, worshipped their God in ocean caves and on the bleak hillsides of their oppressed country. Think of those saintly patriots as they crouched by hedges and in the green dells of Ireland, hunted like wild beasts of prey because they would not renounce their faith or sell their country. And remember that in spite of the most brutal penal laws ever enacted; in the face of these things Ireland's national spirit was never broken, her reverence and love for her faith was never lessened. Recall these things, my friends, to-morrow and thank God that no weight has ever been heavy enough to crush our beloved native land."

Mr. Finerty concluded his masterly address by eloquent references to Wolfe Tone, Emmet, O'Connell, and other Irish patriots of the last 100 years. "The sons of Ireland," he said, "have fought upon almost every battle field of freedom. Many a noble Irishman has lost his life in freely fighting to set above the red flag of England the green colors of old Erin. Many an Irish hand has driven the steel into the breast of the redcoats for Ireland's sake. In this beloved land of the stars and stripes from Bunker Hill to Appomattox, the Irish soldier has fought the fight of freedom. When the picture of the civil war is painted it will show not only the brave Meagher, and many another dashing Irish general but it will reveal the victor of the American Merango, a brave son of every Caven parent, seated upon a foaming fiery black charger, waving a flaming sword in his determined grasp as he turns back once more to Winchester and victory the fleeing federal forces, fighting Phil Sheridan. [Great applause.] We have no reason to be ashamed of our native land. The fight is not over yet. If we are weak in Ireland we are strong here. Ireland is down, but not extinguished. The god of justice looks down upon her, and by the aid of her loyal sons she will be once more placed upon the proud pedestal of national freedom."

Three hearty cheers were given for Mr. Finerty at the close of his address.

WHERE GAME ABOUND.

The Rights to Be Seen in Race Track Canyon.

William Hyde, speaking of his late trip through Race Track canyon, says that for three miles he never out of sight of game tracks, which he thought to be elk, lynx and rabbit. He saw several of the latter; also grouse. For eight miles, from Granite to the head of Boulder, the road runs through an open plateau where wagons can drive anywhere in summer time, and where water and grassy places are plentiful. Here also is passed a lake, where most of the granite picnics are held. Then crossing a bald hill by gentle declivity, one enters a thick growth of timber that would need to be cut out fifty feet wide for the sun to reach and dry out the ground. On coming to the bottom of the canyon of the creek is crossed to the south side, which, though covered with green firs, is not so thick but that one can see between them for half a mile. Recrossing the creek, the open timber and a delightful park opens out until a bluff 40 feet high crosses the ground. This would make a great reservoir, as back of it are lakes and beaver dams, for a mile or two, and half a mile wide. The creek runs between the bluff and the mountain on the south side is only about 40 feet wide, and after running a few hundred feet falls down the mountain side over a hundred feet, making a fine water power. Then a point is reached where a grade should be made fifty tons of masonry and cost say 7,000 pounds of oats, all of which I will sell for $7,000, $4,500 in cash and the balance in mortgages on the place. Call for particulars in Deer Lodge, and call soon, as the time is approaching when I may have to lease or sell.
